The Lyceum Literary Award was established in 2017 for supporting young prose and poetry writers.

The Award seeks to find young talented Russian authors capable of writing high-quality fiction and poetry and making a real contribution to preserving and developing Russian and international literature. It also provides ongoing support for talented writers, promotes winners on international publisher markets, and nominates them for major international literary awards, including the Noble Prize for Literature.

The Award competition is open to literary works in Russian written by authors aged 15–35 who have not been nominated for any national literary award previously. The author's place of residence is not important.
