German Sadulaev's fiction combines settings and themes from corporate Russia and from Chechnya, where he was born.

German Sadulaev left Chechnya in 1989, before the Chechen War, to study law in Leningrad. His I Am a Chechen! and The Raid on Shali reflect on life in Chechnya, and The Tablet features an “office plankton” character named Maximus who fancies himself a Khazar in his dreams. The Raid on Shali and The Tablet were both nominated for numerous awards: they were shortlisted for the Russian Booker in, respectively, 2010 and 2008. Sadulaev's The Leap of the Wolf, published in 2012, is a collection of essays on the political history of Chechnya.

Born in the village of Shali, in the Chechen-Ingush Autonomous Republic. Lives in St. Petersburg, where he went to law school. Sadulaev has referred to his time in Chechnya as exile, saying he lived in Petersburg while in utero and considers it his native city.
